In this shocking, hard-hitting expose in the tradition of Naomi Klein and Barbara Ehrenreich, the editorial director of the award-winning site Feministing.com, Maya Dusenbery brings together fresh data and personal stories to challenge the reader to think critically about the state of women and medicine. Offering a clear-eyed explanation of the root causes of this insidious and entrenched bias, Dusenbery addresses the complex issues that women face in the medical field. She examines the biases and stereotypes that dismiss women as 'too emotional' or 'too nurturing' to be competent doctors, and the ways in which these biases have led to unequal treatment of patients. Dusenbery also looks at the financial implications of gender discrimination in the medical field, and the ways in which women are paid less than their male counterparts. Through interviews with women physicians, Dusenbery presents a powerful case for change, and offers practical solutions for closing the gender pay gap in medicine.
