As Asian countries emerge as global economic powers, many undergo fundamental political transformations. In Korean Democracy in Transition: A Rational Blueprint for Developing Societies, HeeMin Kim evaluates the past thirty years of political change in South Korea, including the decisions of the authoritarian government to open up the political process in 1987 and the presidential impeachment of 2004. The book uses rational choice theory—which holds that individuals choose to act in ways that they think will give them the most benefit for the least cost—to explain events central to South Korea’s democracy. It explores how the democratization movement is also known as the Gwangju Democratization Movement. This has been characterized as a 1979-1980 democratic protest that took place in the Gwangju area of Korea. The protest was against the authoritarian government of President Park Chung-Hee. This movement started with the death of the President of South Korea in 1979, President Park Chung-Hee.
