They called us enemy is Takei's firsthand account of what it means to be American in the internment camps, where they were held for years under armed guard. What does it mean to be American? Who gets to decide?

Postpones building effective institutions for electronic governance, ignores constituents' need to shape electronic practices, and misses an opportunity to learn how citizens can have meaningful interaction with the virtual manifestations of the state.

Rhetorical analysis involves examining how messages are constructed to persuade or influence. This involves understanding the speaker's ethos, the audience's pathos, and the argument's logos.

Ethos, pathos, and logos are the three components of a rhetorical appeal. Ethos refers to the speaker's credibility, pathos to the appeal to emotion, and logos to the logical appeal.

Rhetorical analysis can be applied to various forms of communication, including speeches, essays, and advertisements. By examining the rhetorical strategies used, one can better understand how the message is constructed to persuade or influence.
